

Zoya Sattar, Research Fellow

Zoya Sattar is pursuing a Master's Degree in Conflict Prevention at the Paul H. Nitze School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS) in DC. Having previously interned at the Pakistani-American Political Action Committee and the Oklahoma Institute for Child Advocacy, she is committed to improving policies affecting the lives of Muslims, South Asian diaspora, and other minority groups. As a previous President of the JHU Muslim Student Association, she has worked to foster relations with various interfaith and student groups on campus in order to dispel stereotypes about Islam. Zoya's primary career goal is to work within global relations and to become a diplomat - to have the opportunity to be a part of policy development focused on long-term stability.
